I think that's a party for a boy. My kids and I do: low to mid-range, and usually just the first couple rows. After that it gets uncomfortable in the car. I guess the are quite a bit taller than I and have much broader shoulders and ribs. Fortunately, there are ways around this. Two or three (or more) of your kids can sit in the front seat, and your kids can be the tallest out of them. Other ones can sit on the front bench, and, if you're really brave, you can ride in the back with the kids. And the kids can sit on the back bench with their legs hanging over the back...and all of your kids can sit in the back. To be fair, as long as there's a place for all of your kids in the car, any order is the same as any other order, but being fair to your kids' feelings is important. A fourth episode of Atlanta, the comedy-drama series currently airing on FX, was shot last week in Los Angeles, but none of the actors who worked on the episode—which was focused on the relationship between the titular Atlanta Hawks and the Georgia Bulldogs—have even been signed onto the show's next season. So what's the holdup? According to Deadline, the single most likely reason is that the actors who played the Atlanta Hawks—including Lakeith Stanfield, Brian Tyree Henry, and Zazie Beetz—
